MAC HAS THE BEANS

There is nothing more pleasant to a man with a "green thumb" than to hit the jack-pot with a bumper harvest. J. Wilber McDearmon, who lives on Media Street, Appomattox, planted 180 hills of a special pole butterbean, a variety by the name of Willow, which he secured from around Franklin. The beans really produced, and "Mac" called in The Times-Virginian to see the harvest. His frozen food box was overflowing with the yield, which, he said, went to half-a-bushel in the pod on a single vine; yet, the harvest is not all in and there is no question but what J .Wilbur McDearmon has the beans!

"CAN'T FARM EFFICIENTLY WITHOUT COVER CROPS"

Courtland, Va.- "We cannot farm efficiently without cover crops. They have a stimulating effect to our farming program as the first cup of coffee at breakfast," says E. A. Davis, county agricultural agent for Southampton.

His county, Davis believes, leads all others in Virginia in the use of cover crops. Southampton farmers plant them each autumn to protect their soils from leaching, from wind, and water erosion, to improve the soil, and to provide winter and spring grazing.

For supporting evidence, Davis turns to one of his larger farmers, E. B. Parker, who says: "I use annual rye grass more than any other crop for winter cover. This wonder grass is quite hardy and when broadcast over corn fields, either by hand or airplane, will germinate and grow without covering, cultivating or fertilizing. In a few weeks after seeding and immediately after corn picking, I can put livestock on the field. They will graze the grass and clean the fields of the corn that the picker did not save — a very economical salvaging operation.

"Peanuts, my principal money crop, follow corn with a rye grass winter cover. I like this rotation. Fertilizer for all three of these crops can be applied to corn and satisfactory growth and yield usually follow.

"Crimson clover is another cover crop that I appreciate. When properly inoculated and planted, crimson clover makes a growth that completely covers the land. It is a real hazard to erosion, and being a legume, not only provides wonderful grazing, but imposves the nitrogen content of the soil by 50 to 100 pounds, depending on the growth and extent of grazing. And it puts the soil in excellent condition for corn the following year.

"Abruzzi rye is a very good winter cover crop, though the seed should be covered for good germination. Abruzzi does not have the root system that rye grass has. Therefore, I do not think it is as good a cover or soil conditioner; nor will abruzzi rye provide as much grazing as rye grass or crimson clover.

"Since peanut, cotton, and corn acreages have been reduced by the ASC program, I often plant what I like to refer to as a small grain winter cover crop. This may be oats or barley. These are planted in October, following peanuts. They are fertilized when planted; therefore, they make greater growth, affording more cover and grazing.

"When planting time comes in the spring, any of these crops may be turned, part turned, or all left to mature, depending on the need

From where I sit ... by Joe Marsh

A Real "Novel" Idea

Had a call from Whitey Fisher, head of the Town Library's Emergency Committee. He's asked me to explain the situation.

This is the "emergency." The Library's moving into its new building next week—over on Bridge Street. Moving all those books will cost more than $200. At that rate we won't be able to afford any new books for a couple of years.

Whitey's got the solution—have everyone in town borrow at least five books, keep them a week, and return them to the new address!

From where I sit, cooperation among neighbors is the lifeblood of a town. People should work together . . . whether it's to help a library or fight intolerance. For instance, if you'll respect my right to an occasional glass of beer—and I respect the beverage of your choice . . . that kind of cooperation will do lots to help wipe intolerance "off the books."

we have of the land.

"I try to cover all my land with a winter cover each year. Another advantage of cover crops is that they increase the water - holding capacity of the soil and with our dry summers, we certainly need this additional water. They make the land easier to work.

"They make money for me by saving, and with clover, improving the fertility of the soil, and by improving luxuriant grazing from October until March."
